Student Organization Spotlight: Sisters Supporting Sisters

Sisters Supporting Sisters is an organization dedicated to serving the collegiate and Dallas community. Through various events and programming they strive to serve as leaders within the community and as a support network, not only for minority students on campus, but also for all women. One of their greatest successes is "Progression of a Black Woman." "This is an annual program put on during Black History Month that presents the audience with a personal look at what it has meant to be a black woman in America over the decades and just how far we have come as a Nation," says president Shanitah Young. Each decade is marked by a performance and question and answer session. This year they will perform their 3rd annual production.

Is your organization battling burnout?

At this point in the semester, your members have a lot to think about: doing well in class at the end of the semester, keeping up with their extracurricular responsibilities, and trying to have a social life too! As leaders, you can motivate and encourage your members through this tough time.

- Recognize! Formally or informally thank your members who go above and beyond.
- Lend a hand. Offer to take on a project or task for a member who's feeling stressed.
- Take a break. Consider cutting your meeting short to grab a bite.
- Focus on your goals. Revisit the goals you set for this year to increase motivation.
