World Changers Shaped Here

SMU will not discriminate in any program or activity on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, age, disability, genetic information, veteran status, sexual orientation or gender identity and expression. The Executive Director for Access and Equity/Title IX Coordinator is designated to handle inquiries regarding nondiscrimination policies and may be reached at the Perkins Administration Building, Room 204, 6425 Boaz Lane, Dallas, TX 75205, 214-768-3601, access@smu.edu, 1-877-738-3601.
You’ve worked hard in the classroom and made all the right moves to get admitted to the college of your choice. How can you attract the kind of attention that leads to offers of admission? Here are five ways you can stay ahead of the curve.

1. Focussed
   Even if your entry is as simple as a list of the things you did that day, keeping a record of your thoughts, activities and goals can be extremely helpful. You will develop your writing skills and document your accomplishments, which will come in handy when it’s time to write application essays.

At SMU, you’ll find yourself at home among ambitious students like yourself. You will have access to a variety of resources that will help you meet your educational goals and succeed at every level. For example, SMU’s Altshuler Learning Enhancement Center offers a writing center, free tutoring and tips on study skills and test taking to enhance your academic performance.

Coursework at SMU is rigorous, and even the best students want to make sure they are at the top of the class.

2. Teachable
   A letter of recommendation from a teacher in one of your junior- or senior-year core academic subjects is a huge asset – so talk to your teachers now about your college plans. It’ll show them you’re serious about getting into a great school, and they’ll spread the word about how motivated you are.

A student-to-faculty ratio is 11:1 and the average class size is 24 students. That creates many opportunities for you to work side-by-side with dedicated faculty mentors who also will help you build a foundation for a great professional network beyond college.

3. Curious
   The more information you gather, the more you’ll be in control and ready for upcoming deadlines. Don’t be afraid to call the admission office of a school you’re considering. Colleges notice when you make contact on your own (instead of your parents doing it) because asking questions shows interest and initiative – traits colleges value.

SMU students come from all 50 states and more than 90 countries to create an inspiring community of scholarship, intellectual entrepreneurship and achievement. You and your peers can take advantage of more than 100 majors and 85 minors that give you the academic flexibility to study what you love. In fact, about half of SMU undergraduates pursue more than one area of study. SMU will push you to dream big and achieve real-world success.

4. Connected
   Research the cities where you’d like to go to school and the connections that a desired college can provide. Knowledge of a university’s reach and locale will show admission officers that you’ve interested in taking advantage of the opportunities offered, and ultimately broadening the alumni network.

Dallas is more than just a location – it’s a resource to explore big ideas and big opportunities. In the No. 5 city on the Forbes list of the 15 best big cities for jobs, SMU students build early career success through abundant internship and experiential learning opportunities. SMU ranked No. 6 among the top 25 U.S. schools for internships in The Princeton Review.

5. Engaged
   Being in a dozen organizations may sound impressive – but you’ll stand out if you’ve a leader in one or two you really care about. Leadership experiences help demonstrate how you’ve put your academic talents to use. When you write your application essay, you’ll be more memorable than students who simply list their accomplishments.

With nearly 200 student organizations, SMU students are involved on campus from day one. Whether you want to address world problems through research, service projects or programs such as Engaged Learning, or you want to connect with peers in club sports, honor societies or special interest groups, SMU has a spot for you. Your SMU Admission Counselor is ready to help you find your place on the Hilltop and answer your questions. Meet yours at smu.edu/counselor.
