

Group Dynamics

Tuckman's Model of Group Development is a helpful explanation of the group process. This can assist you with understanding the natural group tendencies and how to work with the group to achieve maximum potential.

Stage 1: Forming

Individual behavior is driven by a desire to be accepted by the others, and avoid controversy or conflict. Serious issues and feelings are avoided, and people focus on being busy with routines, such as team organization, who does what, when to meet, etc. Overall this is very task oriented and a comfortable stage to be in, but the avoidance of conflict and threat means that not much actually gets done.

Stage 2: Storming

Individuals in the group can only remain nice to each other for so long, as important issues start to be addressed. Some people's patience will break early, and minor confrontations will arise that are quickly dealt with or glossed over. Members will challenge the leadership. Some will observe that it's good to be getting into the real issues, whilst others will wish to remain in the comfort and security of Stage 1. Depending on the culture of the organization and individuals, the conflict will be more or less suppressed, but it is there, under the surface.

Stage 3: Norming

As Stage 2 evolved, the "rules of engagement" for the group become established, and the group's tasks or responsibilities are clear and agreed. Team building efforts to increase group unity and shared responsibility are encouraged. Having had their arguments, they now understand each other better, and can appreciate each other's skills and experience.

Stage 4: Performing

Not all groups reach this stage, characterized by a state of interdependence and flexibility. Everyone knows each other well enough to be able to work together, and trusts each other enough to allow independent activity. Group members assume roles that are necessary to achieve goals. Group identity, loyalty, and morale are all high, and everyone is equally task-oriented and people-oriented. This high degree of comfort means that all the energy of the group can be directed toward the tasks at hand.

Stage 5: Adjourning

This stage involves the termination of task behaviors and disengagement from relationships. A planned conclusion usually includes recognition for participation and achievement and an opportunity for members to say their goodbyes.

Groups can move backwards and forwards through group development. For example:

- A new member may introduce the Storming Stage again.
- A program doesn't go as planned, and an upset member introduces the Storming Stage
- A few new members necessitate the Forming Stage mid-year

Questions to ask yourself...

- Why is group development important?
- What stage is my group in right now? Why?
- How can I help them move along to the Performing Stage?

Adapted from:

<http://www.chimaeraconsulting.com/tuckman.htm> via Center for Leadership and Community Engagement,
University of Arkansas

Facilitating Group Development – Spring 2010 Advisor Development Series – University of Arkansas