ANTH 6316 ADVANCED SEMINAR IN ETHNOLOGY I. GLOBALIZATION AND HEALTH. Offers an exploration of the topic of globalization as it shapes our experience and understanding of human health. Studies of globalization typically address processes of governance, international trade and economics, and glows of people, technology, and information on a global scale. Each of these themes is present in the readings assigned. However, students are expected to engage more deeply, through their own work, with the subaltern, the local, and the erased features of our global experience, and with ways of being human (and healthy) that elude us.

ANTH 6333/4333. LABORATORY METHODS IN ARCHAEOLOGY: UNDERSTANDING THE MATERIAL CULTURE OF PICURIS PUEBLO, NM. Provides both training and hands-on experience in the analysis of survey data, ceramics, stone tools, faunal remains, sediments and other related information from Picuris Pueblo. Course participants will learn analytical techniques and then apply them to archaeological collections that spans nearly 60 years of research at this Indigenous northern Rio Grande Pueblo community.

Participants will use team-based research to provide new insights into material culture change at this 1000-year-old community, assisting Picuris in the documentation of its long history.
