DID YOU KNOW... that 39% of hiring managers say that Tuesdays are their most productive day? While this might give us an excuse to have a case of the Mondays, waiting until hump day isn’t advised—just 14% voted Wednesdays as the most productive. To get the most out of your work week, time management coaches suggest that you actually use the weekend to relax and recharge instead of tackling a list of house chores—the laundry can wait until Tuesday.

IN HISTORY

Many sports commentators believed it would take as many as five years for the SMU Mustangs to win a football game after the team sat out the 1987 and 1988 seasons. But how many did it really take? Just two games! In what became known as the “Miracle on Mockingbird,” the Mustangs scored 17 points in the last five minutes of the game against the Connecticut Huskies on September 16th, 1989.

that a single coffee tree produces one whole pound of coffee beans? That’s about 4,000 beans! But before you go out and buy your very own coffee tree, consider this: it takes all year for that one tree to produce its one pound of coffee which keeps the average coffee drinker wired for only about two weeks. Also, only Hawaii and Puerto Rico have the conditions within the U.S. to support a coffee crop. Which means that the rest of our nation’s beans (3.3 billion to be precise) are imported. Bottoms up!

On October 2, 1950, the Peanuts comic strip debuted. But did you know that the comic strip was not originally a success? In 1947, Schulz started a cartoon feature called Lil Folks but when the strip failed in a local paper, Schulz sold the strip to United Features Syndicate which changed the name to Peanuts. In that first strip that ran on October 2nd, Charlie Brown walks by two friends, one of whom remarks, “Well! Here comes ‘ol Charlie Brown! Good ‘ol Charlie Brown . . . yes sir! Good ‘ol Charlie Brown . . . how I hate him!” And from there he went. Charlie Brown and the gang had been picked up by hundreds of papers by the end of the decade.

IN HISTORY

The first Thanksgiving feast dates back to November 1621 when the newly arrived Pilgrims joined the Wampanoag Indians for a three-day celebration. While turkey was likely on the menu, other fowl like geese, duck, and swan were probably consumed, too. And that cranberry sauce you dread but Grandpa always insists on? Not likely. That’s because the sugar sacks that had been loaded on the Mayflower were nearly or fully depleted by November 1621. Rather, cooks didn’t begin boiling cranberries with sugar to accompany meat until about 50 years later!

that men’s use of the word “whom” in online dating profiles results in 31% more contact from women? Data from match.com and OKcupid sites shows that women apparently dig grammar, likely because it’s seen as an indicator of socioeconomic background and where the guy is headed in life. Also, the “hottest” pictures were those featuring toothy smiles instead of tight-lipped ones. Over winter break, we recommend brushing up on your lexicon and pearly whites.

On December 10, 1901, the first Nobel Prizes are awarded, five years after the death of Alfred Nobel, the Swedish inventor of dynamite. Nobel’s will had directed most of his fortunes to a fund in which the interest would be “annually distributed in the form of prizes to those who, during the preceding year, shall have conferred the greatest benefit on mankind.” Although no public reason was given for Nobel’s direction, it’s believed that he did so out of moral regret over the lethal uses of his inventions during wartime.

that 3,000 pounds of confetti gets dropped on New York’s Time Square every year? I bet you think some kind machine is responsible for scattering all of that paper around, but you’d be wrong. Stationed in nine area buildings, a team of 80 engineers hand tosses every inch of confetti 20 seconds before midnight. They do this so that when viewers tune in seconds before the new year, confetti is already dancing across their TV screens. It takes about 20 minutes for all of the confetti to settle, a celebration that has been orchestrated since New Year’s Eve 1993.

On January 14, 1952, the NBC TODAY show’s first host, Dave Garroway, greeted the viewers with the first of many “good mornings” to come—the show turns 63 years old this year! Headlines that day covered everything from music and art to “explosive sweaters made from synthetic rayon which had been exploding in 50 seconds!” Matt Lauer did not join the TODAY show until 1994 and was not officially a co-anchor until January 6th, 1997, but what a lovely addition he’s made.

In 1967, the year of the first Superbowl, just about any fan could afford a ticket to the big game. Those interested in attending had to spring just $12. But game-goers to February 1st’s Superbowl XLIX (that’s 49) will have to forgo $4,800 for a ticket through Ticketmaster. As a librarian, math really isn’t my forte, but that sounds like quite an inflation rate.

that former President John Adams was the first lawyer-president? He was also the only president of the first five who wasn’t a slaveholder. Adams also lived to be exceptionally old, passing on July 4th, 1826 at 90 years old--no president lived longer until Ronald Reagan. Perhaps he owed his longevity to his unusual breakfast beverage of choice: not coffee, but a steeping hot cup of... hard cider.

Nearly 100 years ago, Girl Scouts used to make their famous cookies from scratch with their mothers using a recipe from The American Girl magazine, published by the Girl Scouts. Back then, a box of their thin mints would only cost you $0.23 a box (compared to the $4 most boxes cost now). We bet the Girl Scouts from the 1920s could have also never predicted selling their cookies online. IN HISTORY

April 1, 1852: The origin of April Fool’s Day remains somewhat of a mystery, but several historians date the day of jokes back to 1852 when France switched to the Gregorian calendar. Those who were slow to get the news that the start of the new year moved to January 1st became the butt of a few jokes when they were caught incorrectly celebrating on April 1st. These revelers could be caught with paper fish on their backs, said to symbolize a young, easily caught fish and a gullible person. Taking the cake, though, for best April Fool’s joke probably goes to Burger King: in 1998, they advertised a left-handed whopper. And people actually tried to order it.

that a whopping 99% of the “wasabi” served in the U.S. isn’t actually wasabi? Real wasabi is from the stem of a Japanese plant and is worth about $5 just for a small dollop which is why you’ll likely only find it in high-end restaurants. So then what’s the green stuff you find in your grocery store sushi? Usually, it’s a mix of regular horseradish and green food dye. Well, dang.

that there is a Hearth, Patio & Barbecue Association completely devoted to all things barbecue? And they’ve put together some fun facts just in time for the grilling season. The most popular holidays for barbecuing are, in order, July 4th, Memorial Day, and then Labor Day. The first White House barbecue started with the 36th president, Lyndon B. Johnson, who cooked up Texas-style ribs (obviously). And the most popular foods for the grill, in order, are: burgers, steak, hot dogs, and chicken with corn as the most popular side. Well, now I’m hungry.

On August 1st, 1961, the first park in the Six Flags chain opens in our own backyard. The Six Flags Over Texas location in Arlington, Texas was the first park to feature the log flume ride and it would later become the first park with a 360-degree looping roller coaster. In the inaugural year, admission to Six Flags cost only $2.75 for an adult and park-goers could snag a hamburger for 50 cents. Originally intended as a short-term opportunity to make a buck off of some vacant land, Texas oilman Angus Wynne Jr. decided to keep the park going after recouping his initial $3.5 million investment within just 18 months. Smart thinking on his part: the park saw over 17.5 million visitors within the first 10 years. Today, the park sees an average of 3 million visitors a year.
