COLLEGE EXPERIENCE SEMINAR

In the afternoon, students participate in a special College Experience seminar.

PLSC 4330: Politics and Film

Most Americans look upon films or movies as entertainment. Yet, for students of politics, films can add insight into what we learn in class, in our reading, and in our own research. In so doing, films can serve the purpose of deepening our understanding of politics and culture in the United States. This course will use films as a vehicle for enhancing our understanding of real-world politics and the political research that is typically examined in courses on American politics. We will consider political ambition, electoral politics, the nature of political leadership, theories of decision-making, and the role of the media in American politics. As well, films portray – whether accurately or not – the conduct of politics. But there is also a politics of film making. Films have the potential to deepen our understanding of the political change experienced by the nation. At the same time, such films often raise questions about the political agenda of their creators, the use or misuse of history, and the extent to which the portrayal of people and events is motivated by the profit incentive and cultural norms that govern the industry.

Please note that University regulations occasionally require a class time change or a course cancellation due to insufficient enrollment.
